

Marwan Chamaa's career began in the mid eighties and continues to metamorphose to this day. Throughout his artistic journey, Marwan's muse has always been his environment. Marwan, currently living in the U.S.A., resided in many diverse settings such as Munich, New York, and Beirut. As his renditions of his surroundings have been reinvented in terms of styles, he has always remained true to capturing and interpreting his world as he sees it to his audience.

Born in Beirut (Lebanon), raised in Munich (Germany), and living in the U.S.A. exposed him to different cultures and formed him into the eclectic versatile artist he is today. Marwan has the spirit of a global citizen but never forgetting his Middle Eastern roots. Translating this gift in his art and lifestyle to bridge the gap, which is evident now more than ever, between the East and West.

Marwan Chamaa's art journey began in the mid eighties at the American University of Beirut and two years later at the Beirut University College (now known as the Lebanese American University) where he joined the fine arts and graphic design department. In the late 80s he was enrolled in the Corcoran School of Art in Washington DC, where he focused on fine arts and computer art, which at the time was just in its infant stages.

During college Marwan focused on creating art for the sake of creating art and experimented with a select group of artists on different types of media and techniques. In the 80s Marwan Chamaa's art was a collection of impressionistic interpretations of his surroundings including collages, a collection of which was shown in 1991 as a duo exhibit, and a few months later as a solo exhibition.

His background in graphic design/ fine arts and his interest in the consumer world, led him in the late eighties to co-found with two college mates Art Factory, a graphic design production house that served as a vehicle for launching creative ideas in the advertising world.

In the early to mid 90s, when downtown Beirut was undergoing a massive makeover, Marwan's paintings took on old Beirut: Beirut of the 50s and 60s. His paintings marveled at the vibrancy of the old souks, the details brought out in his signature use of bold colors. Although Marwan was residing in the USA at the time, he still pursued his project and made use of old pictures and postcards, turning them into homage to the city under reconstruction.

Towards the end of the 90s and the turn of the century, so-to-speak, Marwan Chamaa painted New York City. Living in the eclectic and dynamic East Village in New York City, which was the mecca for artists, musicians, writers, and poets, exposed Marwan to Latin beats, Indian kitsch, Japanese punk, and Ukrainian flavors. The chaos of China Town and the Godfather feel of Little Italy, the lights, sounds and captivating larger than life feel of the brightly illuminated Times Square iconified as "the crossroads of the world", the yellow cabs zigzagging, honking through the streets and avenues, the business world of mid-town, and the mono-chromatic uniqueness of Wall Street, the über artistic edge of Soho, Noho, West Village, Chelsea, the former epicenter of the poor immigrant cultures of the Lower East side and the jaggedness of Harlem... all left an eternal imprint in Marwan's creative mind. The streets of Manhattan were interpreted vibrant style with large expressive brushwork and primary colors.

"La Dolce Vita" was launched in 2013, a series that weaves the components of our world with a little dash of retro nostalgia. It is a collection of 12 collage paintings that flow from one canvas to the next to form a 22 meters mural. The collection is an illustrated narrative of a romantic story set against the backdrop of a decadent metropolis starring characters very representative of our time. "La Dolce Vita" was shown on May 4, 2013 as a solo show at Galerie Tanit, (Beirut, Lebanon), September 19, 2013 at the Beirut Art Fair (Lebanon), and September 26, 2013 as a group show at Galerie Tanit (Beirut, Lebanon), and mid of December, 2013 at Bel-Air Fine Art Gallery (Geneva, Switzerland).

At the end of 2013 he showed "Caramels, superheroes, fried eggs et chocolats" comprising of two (191 x 405cm) triptych paintings and one (240 x 185cm) diptych painting. The vibrancy of colors used in the series further emphasizes their imposing size. In both, "La Dolce Vita", and "Caramels, superheroes, fried eggs et chocolats" Marwan chose to depict his story in a collage of images set against the back drop of a contemporary story. "Caramels, superheroes, fried eggs et chocolats", like "La Dolce Vita", is a storyboard narrative, triptych and diptych depicting two scenes that illustrate his message. "Caramels, superheroes, fried eggs et chocolats", again is a story of our times, about the struggle between good and evil and the replacement of moral ethical standards with the decadence found in our everyday life. The "It" girl makes an appearance in this series as well, and both triptych and diptych portray her struggle with her choices and her loss of innocence. "Caramels, superheroes, fried eggs et chocolats" was shown in December 27, 2013 at Bel-Air Fine Art Gallery in Gstaad, Switzerland.

In early 2015, Marwan created "unplugged". This series is partly based on photographs that Carlos René Pérez took of NYC. René an accomplished photographer was Marwan's neighbor in the East Village of New York City where he spent perhaps the best years of his adult life. The images chosen for this series from René's collection of images all speak intimately to Chamaa. They represent a snapshot of his old neighborhood or a vignette of a favorite spot in and around the city. Through René's lens Marwan sees and interprets NYC. It is void of the veneer, and more flawed than outsiders perceive it. The series "unplugged", was shown in February 25, 2015 at Bel-Air Fine Art Gallery in Geneva, Switzerland.

In the Spring of 2015, "Chagrin d'amour – the musical" series was born. The mélange of the Occident and Orient, as is typical in Chamaa's works is evident in this series. Vintage Western comic book covers as well vignettes from famous pieces by Roy Lichtenstein are wittingly, woven with 1940's -

1960's Arabic love song lyrics. Marwan's choice to incorporate Lichtenstein as a backdrop to this particular series is a natural selection as a tribute to the pop artist, who since the beginning of his career, used comic books as subject matter in various of his early paintings. One painting of this series was auctioned on Paddle 8, New York, NY to benefit SEAL (Social and Economic Action for Lebanon). This series was on display in Opera Gallery, Dubai in the Spring of 2016.

Also in 2015, Marwan again uses his surroundings as his muse as he sets forth two large paintings for his series Ecstatic. Using the current affairs in his place of residence at the time, Beirut, where quasi-revolutions were in the making Marwan created this series. Inspired by the likes of Vitaly Komar, Alex Melamid, Wang Guangyi, and Alexander Kosolapov who use communist propaganda symbols as a base to convey a message. However, unlike those great artists Marwan is not criticizing the communist drives but rather using the original propaganda posters of Chairman Mao Zedong, the founding father of the People's Republic of China, as a backdrop to Lebanize his message. The success of the massive revolution in China has many similarities to the success of McDonald's mass branding according to Marwan. This series was exhibited in Vick Vanilian Architecture & Design in January of 2016.

In 2014-2015, Marwan created Mashrou3 Lulu (The Lulu Project). This series is about the adventures of Lulu Moppet, nicknamed Little Lulu, and her friend Thomas Tompkins, aka Tubby. The series is painted in the style reminiscent to the original "The Little Lulu" comic strip covers. The series is comprised of two installations, one triptych and two large format paintings. This work by Chamaa depicts a playful and innocent adventure of Little Lulu and Tubby, incorporating other characters like Hergé's character Archibald Haddock and many hidden surprises. This series was on display in Tawlet, Beirut from June-August 2016.

In late 2016, when asked about the doodles that he has created in-between series, Chamaa replied: "In between projects and in the midst of creating and working on a series, I need to stretch my fingers, wrists, elbows, shoulders, and especially my mind from the detailed and intense work I invest in my artworks. The results are usually city scenes with many random strokes in terms of color, direction, and emotion; I call this routine: shama-sutra."

In April 2017, Marwan showed his visual ode to Mel Ramos in Opera Gallery, Dubai. Marwan Chamaa wanted to expose superheroes with their guard down. Chamaa captured them caught red-handed indulging in their favorite vice. The juxtaposition of these paintings is reminiscent of the iconic Mel Ramos nude celebrities with popular household items. As typical with Marwan's pop-art style, the series is bright, vivid, and meticulous. Marwan emphasizes the duality of the superheroes' identity by reversing the brands to reflect mirrored images that allude to the "other" side. This homage to Ramos transforms the superhero figurines into celebrities provocatively posing with their bad habit indulgence.

In the Spring of 2017, Imago Mundi selected Marwan Chamaa to be among some of the Lebanese artists featured in a book of art from Lebanon. Imago Mundi is the first global collection of contemporary art, supported and promoted by the Benetton Foundation (Fondazione Benetton Studi Ricerche). It was started by Luciano Benetton's collecting works of art on his travels. The piece that Marwan created for this collection is a 10x12 cm seal. The graphic on the seal is an image based on his 'Chagrin d'Amour – the musical' series depicting characters in a struggle, with Arabic writings from a song "The Ruins" by Um Kulthoum, denoting the woman's plea for release from an emotional and physical grip. In this pop art seal, the illustrations are inspired by works from Roy Lichtenstein, Keith Herring, and "Lovelorn". This work is rightfully entitled "Wrapped around your Finger".

In the summer of 2017 Marwan sets off to explore the idea of Arabicity in his series "Ana biddeh" (I want). He wonders what Arabicity really means in this day and age. In fact, in his painting, "It's a fake" Marwan Chamaa shows the audience that the only unifying factor in the Arab society is the appetite for global consumerism and greed. He argues that the Arabs have traded their identity to belong as global consumers rather than to forge a unique identity. They are lured by the biggest, the fastest, the fairest, to the point that they have lost focus of the fine print. Through it all, the society is settling for the fake, for the unreal, for the façade. Marwan even suggests that his painting could be a fake.

Marwan's "The Tarboush Chronicles no. 1" is part of Selections Art Magazine's permanent collection "Cultural Narratives". The collection toured the Arab countries, after it was exhibited in Beirut, Lebanon, Dubai, UAE, and Kuwait City, Kuwait.

In November 2018 Marwan had a solo exhibition at the Mark Hachem Gallery in Beirut Lebanon. "RETRO-PER-SPECTIVE" featured his various interpretations of pop culture through select pieces past and present. The focus of RETRO-PER-SPECTIVE was Marwan's recent work but it also included some of his RETRO work dating back 30 years. The exposition showed his PER-SPECTIVE of pop-culture.

In 2019, Marwan Chamaa dedicates his series, "Silk", to the female form in all of its intense beauty. "Silk", a collection of nine female nudes, shines the spotlight on the sensual power of women paying homage to the eroticism and magnificence of the female body. While most art is shying away from portraying provocatively displayed women as the subject matter of their work, Marwan confidently set out to do just that. Each one of the paintings: Yearn, Joy, Lust, Hunger, Urge, Ache, Flame, Rage, Zest embody the various sentiments portrayed in this series.

The 2019 series "Sign Language" is made up of twelve paintings of various sizes, Marwan Chamaa explores the possibility of finding a universal language that spans across cultures. This universal language refers to the language of well-known signs and logos that have come to denote a language spoken and understood by all. Out of gas? The “Shell” logo will guide you to a station, whether in the sub-Saharan desert or in Geneva. This series painted in his signature bold colors and strokes, reiterates Chamaa’s message that we are all, in fact citizens of one world, communicating through a universal sign language that makes sense to all.

In Spring 2020, Marwan Chamaa created Cin-Cin Comics. Cin-Cin Comics is a biannual tongue in cheek comics-cover-paintings. Cin-Cin Comics uses existing comics elements, topics, and characters as a base to satirically emphasize the cultural, political, and social landscape. Most illustrations are from the mid 50s America, giving the paintings a retro look. Cin-Cin Comics, not always politically correct, is a highly collectible series. Each painting is around 80 cm x 110 cm (31.50 x 43.30 inch), painted usually in acrylic paint.

The 2020 series “Sunday in the Park with Tom” is an illustrated letter to “Tom” (Tom Wesselmann). From this premise, Marwan embarked on interpreting the world today, whether it being on making masterpieces available to the masses by painting-by-numbers to the intertwined thread that holds our diverse lives together through global conglomerates. His canvases each depict companies seen with static that sometimes blurs or taints our perception of reality making each interaction a personal experience. However, the main message behind this series is the migration (of the Lebanese) to foreign lands.

After the August 4, 2020 explosion that destroyed most of Beirut, including Marwan’s studio, he went on to create, “Realignment” about a self-healing spiritual trip. The “therapeutic” paintings are about the Chakras: I understand, I see, I talk, I love, I do, I feel, I am.

In 2021 The Casino Series was born. "Simplicity is an exact medium between too little and too much." -Joshua Reynolds. The Casino Series strips down the stunning view of the Casino bay, located in Jounieh-Lebanon, to geometric shapes and simple lines to emphasize the majestic beauty of the scenery. This series captures the magnificent colors of the bay at different glimpses in a 48-hours palette. The minimalistic compositions highlight the complexity of the spectacular color-scheme of the Casino bay, making the audience fully immersed in the breathtaking view.

In late 2021, Marwan made the decision to relocate to the US with his family. His inaugural series in this new chapter is titled "Lost and Found," an illustrated diary capturing the final days in Lebanon, as they departed a fractured nation in pursuit of a fresh start in the USA.

In 2022 Marwan Chamaa collaborated with the Paris based handbag company, Jamin Puech - Paris. The "More Love" handbag is based on Marwan’s artwork. The limited edition bag’s message was simple: the world, now more than ever, needs "More Love"! “More Love” was sold in many countries all over the globe.

In 2022, Marwan embarked on a mission to support his homeland, partnering with the "International College Washington, DC Alumni Chapter" to assist IC students with their tuition. Half of the proceeds from "The IC Benefit Exhibition" contributed to the International College tuition fund.

With "The Art of Conversation Series," Marwan endeavors to introduce the vibrant Arabic culture to the West, initiating a dialogue through the visually captivating Arabic alphabet. The series not only aesthetically showcases the beauty of the alphabet but also serves to bridge the conversational gap between the East and West. By phonetically spelling out the names of the letters in English, this series aims to teach and foster a connection, all while giving back to Lebanon.

The painting series "Red, White, and Blue" started in 2022 and continued until the end of 2023. It is a captivating and evocative exploration of the American Flag, which is one of the most recognizable symbols in the world. This collection delves into the profound meanings and emotions associated with the iconic stars and stripes. Through the "Red, White, and Blue" series, Marwan Chamaa invites viewers to reflect on the profound ideals and values represented by the American Flag. The paintings evoke a sense of patriotism, stirring emotions of pride, unity, and belonging. They capture the essence of the American identity, reminding us of the struggles, triumphs, and aspirations that have shaped the nation. "Red, White, and Blue" also serves as a visual homage to the diverse people who call America home. The series celebrates the multiplicity of voices, backgrounds, and experiences that contribute to the rich tapestry of the nation. It invites viewers to contemplate the inclusive and pluralistic nature of the American identity, encouraging a sense of unity amidst diversity.

In December 2023, amidst Art Basel art week, Marwan showcased his artwork titled "You may say I'm a dreamer" on the global stage of Art Miami. "You may say I'm a dreamer" polyptych 'stamp collection' mixed media painting made up of nine 'stamps' 'mails' the message of 'Love' to the world. It emphasizes global unity, cooperation, and diversity, encouraging a vision of a world working collectively to address challenges and to promote harmony and tolerance.
